Dear DPV™ Licensee:

If you sublicense your CASS Certified™ address matching software to a third party for their use to create their own customized product, their compliance with the DPV license terms and conditions remain your responsibility. The fact that any OEM product achieves independent CASS certification with your DPV-enabled interface does not alter the DPV licensing relationship which exists solely between your organization and the USPS.

As the DPV Licensee, you are responsible for compliance with any DPV Stop Processing and DPV False Positive Reporting that any OEM developer or any other user may experience. You are held accountable for any failure on their part to comply with the licensing requirements and it will be your DPV license that will be at risk in the event a violation is detected that was not accurately reported.

You may not transfer the ability for any OEM supplier to issue restart codes independently. The issuance of restart codes must be a function under your positive control and may not occur through any process that does not involve your direct issuance of the necessary restart codes. All occurrences of DPV Stop Processing or DPV False Positive Reporting incidents must be reported to the USPS, no exceptions!

You must advise any developer or user of software which includes DPV that any transfer of the DPV data outside of the territories of the United States is strictly prohibited. If you know of, or have reasonable belief that such transfer has or may occur, you must not supply DPV data and you must notify the USPS to avoid having your DPV license held in jeopardy for any violation that occurs.

No OEM software development may occur that uses live DPV data for the development process that does not correctly invoke the DPV Stop Processing or DPV False Positive Reporting functions when appropriate.

DPV False Positive Reporting functionality may not be extended or made available to any entity without prior authorization from the USPS.

If you have question or concerns, please contact the Move Update Department at 800-589-5766.

Sincerely,
